

Chapter 1 : How to Have a Great Party (with Pictures) - wikiHow

The office holiday party is a long awaited event for the company's employees. It is a moment when we can analyze the past year, an occasion to drink a glass of champagne with your colleagues, but also an excellent opportunity for the HR department to consolidate the relationships between employees and raise their level of professional satisfaction.

Also, the bride loves wine and wanted a relaxing weekend. We rented a beautiful ranch house in Santa Ynez wine country. The picnic with all eight girls at the last winery was my favorite part of the day. You want her to be surrounded by people she wants there. Joe Krummel Photography Streamline Communication "I handled all of the research and negotiations for the events of the bachelorette party weekend. After all the research was done, I e-mailed the bridesmaids with the different options we had. From there, we worked as a group to finalize everything. I chose to do it this way because we felt it was better to have one person gather all of the info. Be patient when you are planning a trip with multiple, busy women. Be open to suggestions and advice from other attendees! Rapture Photography Book Early "We saved money on plane tickets and travel costs by booking early. This allowed us to splurge on a classy suite at the new Cosmopolitan, a hotel in Las Vegas. Rapture Photography Distribute a Detailed Itinerary "Create an itinerary so that all the guests know where to be and when to be there, especially if you are planning an out-of-town bachelorette party. Ours included all the details for the entire weekend. Night one, lingerie masquerade party; day two, pool party; day three, brunch with Bloody Marys. All the girls said they loved knowing everything that was planned, including what to wear to each event!! This also helps guests feel more comfortable spending money, since they will know exactly what they are paying for. Have plans for dinners, showers, supplies e. I left an open schedule for everyone to relax, lounge by the pool and catch up. We had a blast! No one should go broke from all of this. Since all of my friends have pretty busy schedules and their weekends tend to fill up fast, my sister sent out save-the-date magnets so that everyone would be able to plan around the date. Keep with the theme and go crazy. Instead, we had all the guests dress in white and she wore an aqua blue dress, which made our group really stand out. We brought boas for the girls, and it really made all of us feel like celebrities when we were walking through the casino in Las Vegas, where the party was held. Bystanders even thought we were entertainment hired by the hotel. Also, bring some fast flats our photographer told us about this one! Plus, they roll up and fit just about anywhere. The bride has enough on her plate, and the surprise is half the fun! Just make sure the date you choose for the party works for the bride-to-be. Her calendar might be filling up with wedding to-dos, so double check with her before booking or planning anything. Who knows when you will have the opportunity again to get away with a great group of girls? It was great to see some of the shyer girls really come out of their shell. They ended up being the best ones! We played a balloon game where everyone paired up and had a balloon in between them that had to be popped. The last pair to pop their balloon was eliminated that round. Rent a bus, catch some cabs, arrange a limo, ask your brother if he can pick you all up in his large SUV Just drink responsibly and make sure everyone gets home safe! It was nice to get a chance to laugh and be silly with each of them. I think that each photo series we took perfectly captures our individual relationship. I wanted to do something different that would stand out, be memorable, and be meaningful to the bride. The weekend comes and goes so quickly; it was the perfect idea to capture the moments before the weekend was over.

Chapter 2 : 25 Ways to Throw an Awesome Bachelorette Party | BridalGuide

Having an engagement party forces you to have a sense of your wedding guest list early, as you shouldn't invite anyone who won't be invited to the wedding.; It is an extra event to plan for and pay for or to have someone else plan and pay for.

A less traditional, but perhaps more appealing option, is to have both sets of parents come together to cohost an event. Friends of the couple can also host and may even volunteer to , but before you ask, be conscious of the financial implications. When to Have It The engagement party should fall within a few months of the proposal—otherwise known as the sweet spot between carefree, just-engaged life and the start of serious wedding planning. If your hosts are local, you will likely be celebrating in your city, but if they live out of state, you may want to have it in their city. It comes down to discussing it with the hosts and figuring out the logistics to make it easier on everyone involved. Say you live in New York, but most of your family and friends live in Chicago: You may decide to have your party in your hometown and enlist someone local to help you plan , host it in your current locale or even throw two parties. Just beware of tiring out your guests and bridal party with too many invitations before the wedding day is even close. Also, when picking the party location, consider where you plan to have your wedding—you may not want to ask guests to travel twice. When choosing the venue, think about the vibe you want to create: If you like the idea of having a more elegant affair, you might want to rent out a private room at a restaurant, country club or wine bar. For something more low-key, a house, backyard or favorite local dive might be a better choice. However, if you two or your parents are hosting, the old rule sticks: To avoid a sticky situation later, start working on your wedding guest list now. Then trim the engagement party list down to your wedding party, immediate family and closest friends. How to Invite Feel free to keep the invitations simple. You can even make them yourselves or send out a digital invite. Also, make sure you have most of your wedding website done before the engagement party invitations are sent out so you can include the URL. The website is the easiest, and most subtle, way to spread word about your registry in case guests want to bring you a gift. Anything from passed appetizers or tasting menu stations to a family-style buffet or casual cookout will work. Or get creative and serve up dishes that share something about you. Consider gourmet ice cream sandwiches, assorted baked goods or seasonal treats like candy apples or cotton candy. You might even consider picking a style and theme that are completely different from your wedding day to mix things up. However, the real trick is not to upstage the wedding. What to Wear Your wardrobe will depend on the setting of the party. And if you have a specific dress code for guests, make a note of it on the invitation. Choosing your engagement party style is one thing, but finding your wedding style is a whole different story. Take our Style Quiz to learn your dream wedding aesthetic and how to communicate it to your vendors. You can sync your Guest List Manager and wedding website to update everything at once.

Chapter 3 : Why Do We Have Political Parties

"Throw her a bachelorette party that she will enjoy, not one everyone else thinks she should have." —Christine Piotrowicz "I decided to go with a neon and neutral theme. The bride is a personal shopper for J. Crew and she was having a huge neon-and-neutrals moment, so I played off of t.

Making them feel like kings or queens for the day is one of the best and most lasting gifts you can give them. But where and how should you start? Theme Many parents feel more comfortable starting with a theme around which they can organize invitations, decorations, games, crafts and food. Guest List and Invitations You should make the guest list for your preschooler, but once your child is over three or four, he should be consulted. The invitations can be either store-bought or homemade and should set the mood for the event. Older kids may enjoy making invitations out of paper dolls, puzzle pieces or computer templates, depending on your chosen theme. In addition to obvious information like the time, date and directions, include special details like "bring a swimsuit" or "parents should accompany children. For a small fee, you can often reserve space in a community recreation center or local park. Kid-friendly restaurants, gymnastic centers, fire departments and hands-on museums are also popular. Parties away from home usually work better for children over five since younger children may be overwhelmed by unfamiliar surroundings. Decorations Atmosphere is everything. Set up a tent, pass out flashlights and catch fireflies in the backyard. Entertainment Depending on the ages and attention spans of your guests, outside entertainment could be a big hit. But younger children those under four or five may be frightened or just plain bored by a performance that goes on longer than 45 minutes. Before you write a big check to Chuckles the Clown, consider looking for some local talent. One mother was shocked to hear what the mad scientist entertainer she found in the phone book charged for a two-hour science party. The kids were thrilled with an entertainer who they already knew and loved, the teenage babysitter was happy to make some extra money, and the mom stayed under budget. Everything will be much easier if you have help — a spouse, relative, neighbor, babysitter or friends who can assist with activities as well as serving and cleanup. This is especially important if you will be entertaining young guests whose parents drop them off. Food For brief parties, cake and ice cream is really the only refreshment you need. Many young children look at the cake as the focal point of the whole birthday ritual, so be sure to let them help make it or select it from the bakery. Tradition dictates that the birthday boy or girl gets the first piece of cake and that they will probably choose the piece with the most frosting and decorations on it. Consider having more than one flavor of ice cream on hand, however, since young children can be picky eaters and prefer ice cream over cake. Older guests may actually enjoy preparing the food as much as eating it, so consider substituting cooking for a craft. One family hosted a Floor Pizza Party by putting personal-sized pans of dough on the kitchen floor one for each guest and letting the kids put on sauce, cheese and other toppings. Pepperoni, mushrooms and other vegetables make great eyes and noses for pizza people. As with all aspects of party planning, try to give familiar favorites a personal twist, turning chicken wings into dinosaur wings for a prehistoric feast or serving chicken drumsticks for an orchestra party. This is a party for your child and her friends — not for other parents. Save the fireworks display for your next adult gala. The kids just want to play. Controlling expenses also means that you should not feel obligated to send home goody bags full of expensive toys. They can either play in another room or help out with the party as coat-takers, present-collectors, guest-greeters, or waiters. Expect the Unexpected The hardest thing to plan for at any birthday party is the unexpected. Be prepared for meltdowns. An adult helper can take a distraught child aside while the rest of the group continues celebrating. Stock band-aids, ice and tissue. If parents are dropping off children, be sure you know about any food allergies or relevant medical conditions. Include them in your family celebration — but know that some children are allergic to or afraid of even the most gentle animals. You Might Also Like.
