May and Taylor had settled upon the Grand Dance, derived from a C. Originally Roger and, especially, Brian did not like the name, though Mercury would eventually persuade them both that it was "right" for the band. It had a lot of visual potential and was open to all sorts of interpretations. I was certainly aware of the gay connotations, but that was just one facet of it. Queen went through several bass players before a young electronics major by the name of John Deacon arrived on the scene in January of . This quite shy guy turned up with his immaculate Rickenbacker bass and immaculate amplifier, plugged in, and as soon as he started playing we realized it was right. Later that year, the band was secured recording time at the newly built De Lane Lea studio, and used the opportunity to record several songs that would later appear on their debut album - Liar, Keep Yourself Alive, Jesus, and The Night Comes Down. The demo reel was passed around from producer to producer with little success, until a staff member of Trident records by the name of Roy Thomas Baker was introduced to the band by fellow Trident producer John Anthony. Baker dropped in to watch the band at work and, clearly liking what he heard, recommended Queen to his superiors. It was eventually agreed upon that the fledgling band could record at Trident studios, though after already-established artists had finished their work, such as the likes of Elton John and David Bowie. Relegated to the wee hours of the morning to record the remaining tracks of their first album, the band nonetheless stuck it out until they reached their ultimate goal of "perfection". Queen II was somewhat of a "concept album", split into "White Side" vs. As was in their nature, the band pressed onward after the mediocre success of their first two albums, immersing themselves in a world-wide tour to promote Queen II. Queen played in America for the first time, as a support act for Mott the Hoople. Sheer Heart Attack would be released later that year, focusing more on being accessible to listeners, than the grand and complex ideas of the previous two albums. During this time, the band began developing a huge following in Japan and witnessed their popularity for themselves when they visited the country, mainly in , to promote their fourth and most famous album "A Night At The Opera", featuring the epic "Bohemian Rhapsody". The official cause of death was bronchial pneumonia resulting from AIDS. Over the course of their 30 year career, the band did sound tracks for two films "Flash Gordon" and "Highlander" , released a string of live and studio albums, and had many many fans across the world. This album saw the surviving band members in the studio completing or reworking unused vocals, unreleased variations of Freddie solo material a Queen version of "I Was Born To Love You" for example , and tracks where Brian and Roger added lyrics to flesh out a song "Mother Love". Queen have been on indefinite hiatus since , when John Deacon decided to retire. Brian May and Roger Taylor have performed together as Queen on several occasions award ceremonies, charity concerts, and the like , sharing vocals with various guest singers. Various Queen songs are used in the story, played by a live band. This live band was supported by Brian May and Roger Taylor on the premiere evening. At the end of , May and Taylor announced that they would reunite and return to touring in , with Paul Rodgers founder and former lead singer of Free and Bad Company. The retired John Deacon would not be participating. The show in Ukraine was later released on DVD. Queen and Paul Rodgers officially split up without animosity on 12 May Rodgers did not rule out the possibility of working together again.
