A collection of short stories for children A Gallery of Children , and other stories that became part of the Winnie-the-Pooh books, were first published in 1926. Milne was an early screenwriter for the nascent British film industry, writing four stories filmed in 1927 for the company Minerva Films founded in 1926 by the actor Leslie Howard and his friend and story editor Adrian Brunel. He concluded that "the only excuse which I have yet discovered for writing anything is that I want to write it; and I should be as proud to be delivered of a Telephone Directory con amore as I should be ashamed to create a Blank Verse Tragedy at the bidding of others. Photo by Howard Coster , Missing is Roo, who was lost when Christopher Robin was very young. Shepard drew on the landscapes of Ashdown Forest as inspiration for many of the illustrations he provided for the Pooh books. The adult Christopher Robin commented: A second collection of nursery rhymes, Now We Are Six , was published in 1930. All four books were illustrated by E. Milne also published four plays in this period. He also "gallantly stepped forward" to contribute a quarter of the costs of dramatising P. Barrie on both sides of the Atlantic; he had produced a witty piece of detective writing in The Red House Mystery although this was severely criticised by Raymond Chandler for the implausibility of its plot. Previously Disney had been paying twice-yearly royalties to these beneficiaries. The estate of E. Shepard also received a sum in the deal. Milne and Shepard in creating the world of Pooh. Plot[edit] The film begins with the invention of a racing game called Poohsticks in which Pooh takes a walk to a wooden bridge over a river where he likes to do nothing in particular. On this day, though, he finds a fir cone and picks it up. Pooh thinks up a rhyme to go with the fir cone, but he accidentally trips on a tree root and drops it in the river. Noticing that the flow of the river takes the cone under the bridge, Pooh invents a racing game out of it. As the game uses sticks instead of cones, he calls it "Poohsticks". After somehow rescuing him with a rock, he tells them that he fell in due to being bounced from behind. Piglet assumes it was Tigger who bounced Eeyore into the river. When Tigger arrives on the scene, he claims that his bounce was actually a cough, leading to an argument between him and Eeyore, but with some outside help from the narrator , Winnie the Pooh and his friends find out that he had indeed deliberately bounced Eeyore on page Tigger says it was all a joke, but nobody else feels that way. Tigger disgustedly says that they have no sense of humor, and bounces away. But as Eeyore seems particularly depressed this day, Pooh follows him to his Gloomy Spot and asks what the problem is. Eeyore says that it is his birthday, and nobody has taken any notice to celebrate it. Pooh decides to give him a jar of honey, but does not get far before he has a hunger attack and ends up eating the honey. He decides to ask Owl for advice. Owl suggests that he writes to Eeyore on the pot so that Eeyore could use it to put things in. Owl ends up writing a misspelled greeting hipy papy bthuthdth thuthda bthuthdy means A Very Happy Birthday, With Love from Pooh on the pot and flies off to tell Christopher Robin about the birthday. Piglet is very sad that his gift for Eeyore is spoiled, but he presents it to him anyway, and only a minute later, Pooh brings the empty pot. Eeyore is gladdened, as he puts the busted balloon into the pot and removes it again he also claimed that he likes the color red. Pooh and his friends then pitch in and plan a surprise party for their friend. During the party, Tigger arrives and bounces Rabbit out of his chair. Roo welcomes him to the festivities as Rabbit draws himself up from being bounced on by Tigger, incensed.
