

The new Soper compendium by, , E.F. Soper edition, in English.

She was born on Sept. She is survived by her brothers: William Jane and Charles Short; nieces: Lavelle, Tonya, Danita, Constance, Hermaine; nephews: Keith, Kevin, Charles, Darrell; as well as Mattie has been a Washingtonian her entire life. Born and raised there, she educated in the district schools. In she obtained a job as Shifflette, 76 Mary D. Shifflette, 76, of Prince Frederick, MD, passed away on March 17, , her favorite day of the year, at her home. She was born on November 26, in Washington, DC. Mary began her career with the US Customs Office. After becoming a stepmother, she left US Customs to drive a school Family and friends will unite on Wednesday, March 21, from 5: Bengt was a veteran of the United States Marine Corps, serving from with a construction battalion. He went on to become a master carpenter and then made a career as a general contractor He enjoyed fishing and She was an accountant for She enjoyed crocheting, running her Garden Center and taking care of her flowers, and being with family especially Her devotion to her family and her firm belief in God supported her during her life and ultimately gave her peace. Gisela was born in Tulua, Colombia, South America. She was the youngest of seven children. Perry Gray Bowen, Jr. In , Dorothy married the Geraldine was raised and educated in St. Hilton, passed away in Newburg, MD. The family will receive friends on Thursday, March 22, from 12 noon until time of Life Celebration Service at 1 p. Interment will follow at Trinity Memorial Raymond Louis Holt, Sr. Family and friends will unite on Friday, March 23, for visitation at 9: Interment to follow at Family and friends will unite on Tuesday, March 20, from Interment will be on Monday, March 26, at

Are you sure you want to remove The new Soper compendium from your list?

Archean to Recent aeolian sand systems and their sedimentary record: Current understanding and future prospects. Keeler Dunes, California , Geomorphology, , , doi: Academic Press, San Diego, pp. An Overview, Geochronometica, 38 3 , ; doi: Encyclopedia of Environmental Issues, Salem Press, Aeolian Research, 2 , An introduction to the special issue on planetary dune systems. Sand seas and dune fields of the world: Geomorphology of Desert Environments, 2nd edition, G, , Magnitude and frequency of grain flows on a desert sand dune, Geomorphology, 95, An application to extensive sand sheets and dune fields, Remote Sensing of Environment, , , doi: Conference Report, Episodes, 27, Encyclopedia of Geomorphology, Routledge. Enzel, Y, Wells, S. Quaternary International, , Toward better management of arid and semi-arid lands in the twenty-first century, A. Journal of African Earth Sciences, 29, Methods and Applications, American Geophysical Union, Earth Surface Processes and Landforms, 23, Sustainable Development in Arid Zones, A. Earth Surface Processes and Landforms, 21, Geoinicators - assessing rapid environmental change in earth systems. Geomorphology of Desert Environments, Chapman and Hall, International Association of Sedimentologists, Special Publication 16, Mars, University of Arizona Press, Acta Mechanica, Supplement 2, Palaeogeography, Palaeoclimatology, Palaeoecology, 76, Transvaal Museum Monograph, 7,

Chapter 3 : 42 U.S.C. Overview

The new Soper compendium. Vermont and New York --XIV Sopers --Short Lineage --XV Sopers of Canada and England --XVI Southern Sopers --XVII.

Finally back to full strength, the Giants entered their week 17 matchup with the Dallas Cowboys with both teams tied for the division lead with 8th records. The Giants took a 21st first half lead and while the Cowboys closed the gap to make the score 21st14 early in the 4th quarter, the Giants held on to defeat the Cowboys 31st14, clinching the divisional title and a playoff berth. Manning set new career highs in nearly every statistical category in , throwing for a franchise record 4, yards and 29 touchdowns, with 16 interceptions, giving him a His top target was receiver Victor Cruz , who caught 82 passes for a franchise record 1, yards 3rd in the NFL and 9 touchdowns. But he had plenty of other targets, including Hakeem Nicks 76 receptions, 1, yards, 7 touchdowns , Mario Manningham 39 receptions and yards in 12 games and tight end Jake Ballard 38 receptions, yards. He was also a reliable weapon in the passing game, hauling in 34 receptions for yards and two touchdowns. Brandon Jacobs also made contributions on the ground, rushing for yards and 7 touchdowns. Pierre-Paul racked up 86 combined tackles and ranked fourth in the NFL with The Giants secondary was led by Corey Webster , who intercepted a career-high 6 passes. Defensive backs Kenny Phillips and Aaron Ross added four interceptions each, while safety Antrel Rolle picked off two passes and led the team in combined tackles with The Giants joined the Arizona Cardinals and Los Angeles Rams as the only other team to advance to the Super Bowl with fewer than ten victories since the NFL expanded to a game season in , and the only one of those three to win the Super Bowl they had advanced to. They have won six consecutive playoff games away from their home stadium, dating back to their victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in the Wild Card round. That includes their Super Bowl XLII victory over these same Patriots, although that game was played at a neutral site and the Giants were the designated "away" team for the game. The Giants are the first team in NFL history to reach the Super Bowl after having been outscored by their opponents in the regular season points scored, points allowed. New England lost 2 consecutive games to the Steelers and Giants in week 8 and 9 respectively, before rallying to win their remaining eight games. Back at the helm of the offense was year quarterback Tom Brady , who earned his 7th Pro Bowl selection. Starting every game of the season, Brady completed Brady also added yards and three scores on the ground. His main weapon in the passing game was Pro Bowl receiver Wes Welker , who led the NFL with receptions 22 receptions ahead of second place for 1, yards and 9 touchdowns. New England also had two of the best tight ends in the NFL: Pro Bowler Rob Gronkowski , who set new tight end records for receiving 1, yards and touchdown catches 17 ; and Aaron Hernandez , who caught 79 passes for yards and 7 touchdowns, while also rushing for 45 yards. Another big element of the passing game was veteran receiver Deion Branch , who caught 51 passes for yards and 5 scores. Receivers Chad Ochocinco , Tiquan Underwood , Julian Edelman , and Matthew Slater made minor contributions to the passing attack; the latter two also served as emergency defensive backs. New England had several key contributors in the ground game. Their main rusher was BenJarvus Green-Ellis , who rushed for yards and 11 touchdowns. Running back Stevan Ridley added yards and a 5. Danny Woodhead contributed yards with a 4. Vince Wilfork , who generated 3. Defensive End Mark Anderson was also a major force on the line, earning 10 sacks and two forced fumbles of his own. Behind them, Rob Ninkovich excelled at linebacker, gaining 74 tackles, 6. In the secondary, cornerback Kyle Arrington had a breakout season. After recording just one interception in his first three years, Arrington picked off 7 passes in to lead the NFL in that category, while also making 88 tackles. Linebacker Jerod Mayo led the team in tackles with Season and playoffs[edit] Main article: The Giants defeated the No. The Giants then moved on to face the No. The Giants never trailed in the game, winning 37th One of the key plays in the game was a Hail Mary pass by Manning to Hakeem Nicks , giving New York a 20th10 lead at the end of the first half. This was the first time in NFL history a 15th1 team failed to make it past the divisional round in the playoffs. The Giants then faced the No. After a series of defensive standoffs in the fourth quarter, the game went into overtime. Both teams continued to struggle on offense, until New York linebacker Jacquian

Williams stripped the ball from San Francisco wide receiver Kyle Williams after a punt return. The Giants recovered the ball at the 49ers yard line, setting up a yard field goal attempt by Giants kicker Lawrence Tynes. In the divisional round, the Patriots defeated the Denver Broncos 45â€” The Patriots dominated the game throughout, setting new franchise postseason records for total yards , points 45 , and margin of victory Tom Brady completed 18 of 25 passes for yards and a postseason record five touchdowns in the first half. The Patriots defense had a breakout performance: Broncos quarterback Tim Tebow was held to just 9 of 26 completions and was sacked five times. Brady was out-dueled by Ravens quarterback Joe Flacco , who threw for more yards and touchdowns on the same number of completions and attempts. Nevertheless, New England managed to take a 23â€”20 lead in the fourth quarter on a 1-yard run by Brady. But the Patriots managed to hold them there, with cornerback Sterling Moore breaking up two consecutive Ravens pass attempts in the red zone, including one in the end zone. Facing fourth down, Baltimore attempted a yard field goal by kicker Billy Cundiff that would tie the game and possibly bring it to overtime. Cundiff missed the kick wide left, allowing the Patriots to advance to the Super Bowl. Super Bowl pre-game notes[edit] The Patriots, as the designated home team, had a choice of wearing their home navy blue jerseys or their white away jerseys. Briefly, there was speculation that the Patriots might wear the white away jerseys in order to switch the jerseys from Super Bowl XLII , where the Patriots wore dark blue and the Giants wore white. Also, the Giants were 4â€”0 in playoff games in their white away jerseys since the season. The room shortage and high prices caused some attendees to plan to stay in Chicago, miles away, and ride buses to events. When I got to the team, it was always Red Sox-Yankees.

Chapter 4 : Second Amendment to the United States Constitution - Wikipedia

The new Soper compendium. [Earl F Soper] -- Henry Soper (d/) immigrated from England to Huntington, Long Island, New York in , and married Sarah Wattles. In , he moved to Dix Hills, New York.

Colonists condemned the tax because their rights as Englishmen protected them from being taxed by a Parliament in which they had no elected representatives. The seizure of the sloop Liberty in on suspicions of smuggling triggered a riot. In response, British troops occupied Boston, and Parliament threatened to extradite colonists to face trial in England. Parliament then repealed all taxes except the one on tea, passing the Tea Act in , attempting to force colonists to buy East India Company tea on which the Townshend duties were paid, thus implicitly agreeing to Parliamentary supremacy. The landing of the tea was resisted in all colonies, but the governor of Massachusetts permitted British tea ships to remain in Boston Harbor. So, the Sons of Liberty destroyed the tea chests, an incident that later became known as the " Boston Tea Party ". Additionally, the royal governor was granted powers to undermine local democracy. Meanwhile, representatives from twelve colonies [62] [63] convened the First Continental Congress to respond to the crisis. The Congress narrowly rejected a proposal to create an American parliament to act in concert with the British Parliament; instead, they passed a compact declaring a trade boycott against Britain. In , it declared Massachusetts to be in a state of rebellion and enforced a blockade of the colony. These increasing tensions led to a mutual scramble for ordnance and pushed the colonies toward open war. Overnight, the local militia converged on and laid siege to Boston. Washington then moved his army to New York. They continued in at Canso and then a land assault on Fort Cumberland. The British marching to Concord Meanwhile, British officials in Quebec began lobbying Indian tribes to support them, [84] while the Americans urged them to maintain their neutrality. Quebec had a largely Francophone population and had been under British rule for only 12 years, [87] and the Americans expected that they would welcome being liberated from the British. On October 11, the British defeated the American squadron , forcing them to withdraw to Ticonderoga and ending the campaign. The invasion cost the Patriots their support in British public opinion, [97] while aggressive anti-Loyalist policies diluted Canadian support. Subsequent negotiations broke down, so Dunmore ordered the ships to destroy the town. Olive Branch Petition and United States Declaration of Independence After fighting began, Congress launched a final attempt to avert war , which Parliament rejected as insincere. Patriots followed independence with the Test Laws, requiring residents to swear allegiance to the state in which they lived, [] intending to root out neutrals or opponents to independence. Failure to do so meant possible imprisonment, exile, or even death. States later prevented Loyalists from collecting any debts that they were owed. Due to poor military intelligence , Washington split his army to positions on Manhattan Island and across the East River in western Long Island , [] and an informal attempt to negotiate peace was rejected by the Americans. Howe restrained his subordinates from pursuit, opting to besiege Washington instead.

Chapter 5 : The Top 10 Things to Do Near Victoria Falls Waterfront, Livingstone calendrierdelascience.com shell. Foreign Relations of the United States, , Volume XVI, Southern Africa.

Text[edit] There are several versions of the text of the Second Amendment, each with capitalization or punctuation differences. Differences exist between the drafted and ratified copies, the signed copies on display, and various published transcriptions. The amendment was ratified by the States and authenticated by Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson as: Pre-Constitution background[edit] Influence of the English Bill of Rights of [edit] The right to bear arms in English history is regarded in English law as a subordinate auxiliary right of the primary rights to personal security, personal liberty, and private property. According to Sir William Blackstone , "The Which is declared by statute, and is indeed a public allowance, under due restrictions, of the natural right of resistance and self-preservation, when the sanctions of society and laws are found insufficient to restrain the violence of oppression. Heller , the Supreme Court did not accept this view, remarking that the English right at the time of the passing of the English Bill of Rights was "clearly an individual right, having nothing whatsoever to do with service in the militia" and that it was a right not to be disarmed by the Crown and was not the granting of a new right to have arms. The statement in the English Bill of Rights concerning the right to bear arms is often quoted only in the passage where it is written as above and not in its full context. In its full context it is clear that the bill was asserting the right of Protestant citizens not to be disarmed by the King without the consent of Parliament and was merely restoring rights to Protestants that the previous King briefly and unlawfully had removed. In its full context it reads: Whereas the late King James the Second by the Assistance of diverse evill Councillors Judges and Ministers imployed by him did endeavour to subvert and extirpate the Protestant Religion and the Lawes and Liberties of this Kingdome list of grievances including That the Subjects which are Protestants may have Arms for their Defence suitable to their Conditions and as allowed by Law. While it did not override earlier restrictions on the ownership of guns for hunting, it is subject to the parliamentary right to implicitly or explicitly repeal earlier enactments. Mark Thompson wrote that, apart from determining the succession, the English Bill of Rights did "little more than set forth certain points of existing laws and simply secured to Englishmen the rights of which they were already possessed [sic]. Which is also declared by the same statute 1 W. Some in the United States have preferred the "rights" argument arguing that the English Bill of Rights had granted a right. The need to have arms for self-defence was not really in question. Peoples all around the world since time immemorial had armed themselves for the protection of themselves and others, and as organized nations began to appear these arrangements had been extended to the protection of the state. Constitution[edit] Ideals that helped to inspire the Second Amendment in part are symbolized by the minutemen. Some of these purposes were explicitly mentioned in early state constitutions; for example, the Pennsylvania Constitution of asserted that, "the people have a right to bear arms for the defence of themselves and the state. As defiance and opposition to British rule developed, a distrust of these Loyalists in the militia became widespread among the colonists, known as Patriots , who favored independence from British rule. As a result, some Patriots created their own militias that excluded the Loyalists and then sought to stock independent armories for their militias. In response to this arms build up, the British Parliament established an embargo of firearms, parts and ammunition against the American colonies. Instances of the licentious and outrageous behavior of the military conservators of the peace still multiply upon us, some of which are of such nature, and have been carried to such lengths, as must serve fully to evince that a late vote of this town, calling upon its inhabitants to provide themselves with arms for their defense, was a measure as prudent as it was legal: It is a natural right which the people have reserved to themselves, confirmed by the Bill of Rights, to keep arms for their own defence; and as Mr. Blackstone observes, it is to be made use of when the sanctions of society and law are found insufficient to restrain the violence of oppression. In opposition, the British forces consisted of a mixture of the standing British Army , Loyalist militia and Hessian mercenaries. Federalists argued that this government had an unworkable division of power between Congress and the states, which caused military weakness, as the standing army was reduced to as few as 80 men. Subsequently, the Constitutional Convention proposed in to grant Congress exclusive power to raise and support a standing army and navy of unlimited size. McAfee and Michael J. Quinlan have stated that James Madison "did not invent the right to keep and bear arms when he drafted the Second Amendment; the right was pre-existing at both common law and in the early state constitutions. Blackstone in his Commentaries alluded to this right to rebel as the natural right of resistance and self preservation, to be used only as a last resort, exercisable when "the sanctions of society and laws are found insufficient to restrain the violence of oppression". This will not only lessen the call for military establishments, but if circumstances should at any time oblige the Government to form an army of any magnitude, that army can never be formidable to the liberties of the People, while there is a large body of citizens, little, if at all, inferior to them in discipline and the use of arms, who stand ready to defend their own rights, and those of their fellow-citizens. This appears to me the only substitute that can be devised for a standing army, and the best possible security against it, if it should exist. They cite examples, such as the Declaration of Independence describing in "the Right of the People to On May 10, , Congress passed a resolution recommending that any colony with a government that was not inclined toward independence should form one that was.

Chapter 6 : Ammianus Marcellinus, Roman History. London: Bohn () Book pp.

Doris Evelyn Soper, 86, of St. Leonard, MD. Passed away peacefully on March 2, at her home. She was born on September 9, in Washington DC to the late Benjamin A. and Jennie Minto Walls.

While the variable events of fortune were bringing to pass these events in different parts of the world, Julian, amid the many plans which he was revolving while in Illyricum, was continually consulting the entrails of victims and watching the flight of birds in his eagerness to know the result of what was about to happen. Aprunculus Gallus, an orator and a man of skill as a soothsayer, who was afterwards promoted to be governor of Narbonne, announced these results to him, being taught beforehand by the inspection of a liver, as he affirmed, which he had seen covered with a double skin. And while Julian was fearing that he was inventing stories to correspond with his desires, and was on that account out of humour, he himself beheld a far more favourable omen, which clearly predicted the death of Constantius. For at the same moment that that prince died in Cilicia, the soldier who, as he was going to mount his horse, had supported him with his right hand, fell down, on which Julian at once exclaimed, in the hearing of many persons, that he who had raised him to the summit had fallen. But he did not change his plans, but remained within the border of Dacia, still being harassed with many fears. Nor did he think it prudent to trust to conjectures, which might perhaps turn out contrary to his expectations. But while he was thus in suspense, the ambassadors, Theolaiphus and Aligildus, who had been despatched to him to announce the death of Constantius, suddenly arrived, adding that that prince with his last words had named him as his successor in his dignity. As soon as he learnt this, being delighted at his deliverance from the turmoils of war and its consequent disorders, and fully relying on the prophecies he had received, having besides often experienced the advantages of celerity of action, he issued orders to march to Thrace. Therefore speedily advancing his standards, he passed over the high ground occupied by the Succi, and marched towards the ancient city of Eumolpias, now called Philippopolis, all his army following him with alacrity. For they now saw that the imperial power which they were on their way to seize, in the face of imminent danger, was in a measure beyond their hopes put into their hands by the course of nature. And as report is wont marvellously to exaggerate events, a rumour got abroad that Julian, formidable both by sea and land, had entered Heraclea, called also Perinthus, borne over its unresisting walls on the chariot of Triptolemus, which from its rapid movements the ancients, who loved fables, had stated to be drawn by flying serpents and dragons. When he arrived at Constantinople, people of every age and sex poured forth to meet him, as though he were some one dropped from heaven. On the eleventh of December he was received with respectful duty by the senate, and by the unanimous applause of the citizens, and was escorted into the city by vast troops of soldiers and civilians, marshalled like an army, while all eyes were turned on him, not only with the gaze of curiosity, but with great admiration. For it seemed to them like a dream, that a youth in the flower of his age, of slight body, but renowned for great exploits, after many victories over barbarian kings and nations, having passed from city to city with unparalleled speed, should now, by an accession of wealth and power as rapid as the spread of fire, have become the unresisted master of the world; and the will of God itself having given him the empire, should thus have obtained it without any injury to the state. His first step was to give to Secundus Sallustius, whom he promoted to be prefect of the praetorium, being well assured of his loyalty, a commission to conduct some important investigations, joining with him as colleagues Mamertinus, Arbetio, Agilo, and Nevitta, and also Jovinus, whom he had recently promoted to the command of the cavalry in Illyricum. They all went to Chalcedon, and in the presence of the chiefs and tribunes, the Jovian and Herculan legions, they tried several causes with too much rigour, though there were some in which it was undeniable that the accused were really guilty. They banished Palladius, the master of the ceremonies, to Britain, though there was but a suspicion that he had prejudiced Constantius against Gallus, while he was master of the ceremonies under that prince as Caesar. They banished Taurus, who had been prefect of the praetorium, to Vercelli, who, to all persons capable of distinguishing between right and wrong, will appear very excusable in respect to the act for which he was condemned. For his offence was only that, fearing a violent disturbance which had arisen, he fled to the protection of his prince. And the treatment inflicted on him could not be read without great horror, when the preamble of the public accusation began thus: Pentadius also was destined for a similar sentence; the charge against him being that, having been sent on a mission by Constantius, he had made notes of the replies given by Gallus when he was examined on several subjects before he was put to death. But as he defended himself with justice, he was at last discharged. With similar iniquity, Florentius, at that time master of the ceremonies, the son of Nigrinianus, was banished to Boae, an island on the coast of Dalmatia. In the same way, Evagrius, the comptroller of the private demesnes of the emperor, and Saturninus, late superintendent of the palace, and Cyrinus, late secretary, were all banished. But Justice herself seems to have mourned over the death of Ursulus, the treasurer, and to accuse Julian of ingratitude to him. For when, as Caesar, he was sent to the west, with the intent that he was to be kept in great poverty, and without any power of making presents to any of his soldiers, in order to make them less inclined to favour any enterprise which he might conceive, this same Ursulus gave him letters to the superintendent of the Gallic treasury, desiring him to give the Caesar whatever he might require. After his death, Julian, feeling that he was exposed to general reproach and execration, thinking that an unpardonable crime could be excused, affirmed that the man had been put to death without his being aware of it, pretending that he had been massacred by the fury of the soldiers, who recollected what he had said as we mentioned before when he saw the destruction of Amida. And therefore it seemed to be through fear, or else from a want of understanding what was proper, that he appointed Arbetio, a man always vacillating and arrogant, to preside over these investigations, with others of the chief officers of the legions present for the look of the thing, when he knew that he had been one of the chief enemies to his safety, as was natural in one who had borne a distinguished share in the successes of the civil war. And though these transactions which I have mentioned vexed those who wished him well, those which came afterwards were carried out with a proper vigour and severity. It was only a deserved destiny which befel Apodemius, who had been the chief steward, and whose cruel machinations with respect to the deaths of Silvanus and Gallus we have already mentioned, and Paulus, the secretary, surnamed "The Chain," men who are never spoken of without general horror, and who were now sentenced to be burnt alive. They also sentenced to death Eusebius, the chief chamberlain of Constantius, a man equally full of ambition and cruelty, who from the lowest rank had been raised so high as even almost to lord it over the emperor, and who had thus become wholly intolerable; and whom Nemesis, who beholds all human affairs, having often, as the saying is, plucked him by the ear, and warned to conduct himself with more moderation, now, in spite of his struggles, hurled headlong from his high position. After this Julian directed his whole favour and affection to people of every description about the palace; not acting in this like a philosopher anxious for the discovery of truth. For he might have been praised if he had retained a few who were moderate in their disposition, and of proved honesty and respectability. We must, indeed, confess that the greater part of them had nourished as it were such a seed-bed of all vices, which they spread abroad so as to infect the whole republic with evil desires, and did even more injury by their example than by the impunity which they granted to crimes. Some of them had been fed on the spoils of temples, had smelt out gain on every occasion, and having raised themselves from the lowest poverty to vast riches, had set no bounds to their bribery, their plunder, or their extravagance, being at all times accustomed to seize what belonged to others. From which habit the beginnings of licentious life sprang up, with perjuries, contempt of public opinion, and an insane arrogance, sacrificing good faith to infamous gains. Among which vices, debauchery and unrestrained gluttony grew to a head, and costly banquets superseded, triumphs for victories. The common use of silken robes prevailed, the textile arts were encouraged, and above all was the anxious care about the kitchen. Vast spaces were sought out for ostentatious houses, so vast that if the consul Cincinnatus had possessed as much land, he would have lost the glory of poverty after his dictatorship. To these shameful vices was added the loss of military discipline; the soldier practised songs instead of his battle-cry, and a stone would no longer serve him for a bed, as formerly, but he wanted feathers and yielding mattresses, and goblets heavier than his sword, for he was now ashamed to drink out of earthenware; and he required marble houses, though it is recorded in ancient histories that a Spartan soldier was severely punished for venturing to appear under a roof at all during a campaign. But now the soldier was fierce and rapacious towards his own countrymen, but towards the enemy he was inactive and timid, by courting different parties, and in times of peace he had acquired riches, and was now a judge of gold and precious stones, in a manner wholly contrary to the recollection of very recent times. For it is well known that when, in the time of the Caesar Maximian, the camp of the king of Persia was plundered; a common soldier, after finding a Persian bag full of pearls, threw the gems away in ignorance of their value, and went away contented with the mere beauty of his bit of dressed leather. And Julian, angry at this, expelled all the men of this trade, and the cooks, and all who made similar profits, as of no use to him, telling them, however, to go where they pleased. And although from his earliest childhood he was inclined to the worship of the gods, and gradually, as he grew up, became more attached to it, yet he was influenced by many apprehensions which made him act in things relating to that subject as secretly as he could. But when his fears were terminated, and he found himself at liberty to do what he pleased, he then showed his secret inclinations, and by plain and positive decrees ordered the temples to be opened, and victims to be brought to the altars for the worship of the gods. And in order to give more effect to his intentions, he ordered the priests of the different Christian sects, with the adherents of each sect, to be admitted into the palace, and in a constitutional spirit expressed his wish that their dissensions being appeased, each without any hindrance might fearlessly follow the religion he preferred. He did this the more resolutely because, as long licence increased their dissensions, he thought he should never have to fear the unanimity of the common people, having found by experience that no wild beasts are so hostile to men as Christian sects in general are to one another. And he often used to say, "Listen to me, to whom the Allemanni and Franks have listened;" imitating in this an expression of the ancient emperor Marcus Aurelius. But he omitted to notice that there was a great difference between himself and his predecessor. For when Marcus was passing through Palestine, on his road to Egypt, he is said, when wearied by the dirt and rebellious spirit of the Jews, to have often exclaimed with sorrow, "O Marcomanni, O Quadi, O Sarmatians, I have at last found others worse than you! About the same time many Egyptians, excited by various rumours, arrived at Constantinople; a race given to controversy, and extremely addicted to habits of litigation, covetous, and apt to ask payment of debts due to them over and over again; and also, by way of escaping from making the payments due to them, to accuse the rich of embezzlement, and the tax gatherers of extortion. These men, collecting into one body, came screeching like so many jackdaws, claiming in a rude manner the attention of the emperor himself, and of the prefects of the praetorium, and demanding the restoration of the contributions which they had been compelled to furnish, justly or unjustly, for the last seventy years. And as they hindered the transaction of any other business, Julian issued an edict in which he ordered them all to go to Chalcedon, promising that he himself also would soon come there, and settle all their business. And when they had gone, an order was given to all the captains of ships which go to and fro, that none of them should venture to take an Egyptian for a passenger. And as this command was carefully observed, their obstinacy in bringing false accusations came to an end, and they all, being disappointed in their object, returned home. After which, as if at the dictation of justice herself, a law was published forbidding any one to exact from any officer the restitution of things which that officer had legally received. At the beginning of the new year, when the consular records had received the names of Mamertinus and Nevitta, the prince humbled himself by walking in their train with other men of high rank; an act which some praised, while others blame it as full of affectation, and mean. At the same time he was a continual attendant in the court of justice, settling many actions which were brought in all kinds of cases. One day while he was sitting as judge, the arrival of a certain philosopher from Asia named Maximus, was announced, on which he leapt down from the judgment seat in an unseemly manner, and forgetting himself so far as to run at full speed from the hall, he kissed him, and received him with great reverence, and led him into the palace, appearing by this unseasonable ostentation a seeker of empty glory, and forgetful of those admirable words of Cicero, which describe people like him. Not long afterwards, two of the secretaries who had been banished came to him, boldly promising to point out the hiding-place of Florentius if he would restore them to their rank in the army: On all these occasions Praetextatus was present, a senator of a noble disposition and of old-fashioned, dignity; who at that time had come to Constantinople on his own private affairs, and whom Julian by his own choice selected as governor of Achaia with the rank of proconsul. Still, while thus diligent in correcting civil evils, Julian did not omit the affairs of the army: And while superintending these matters he allowed nothing to be done carelessly: While he gave his attention to these and similar matters, his fame was spreading among foreign nations for courage, temperance, skill in war, and eminent endowments of every kind of virtue, so that he gradually became renowned throughout the whole world. And as the fear of his approach pervaded both neighbouring and distant countries, embassies hastened to him with unusual speed from all quarters at one time; the people beyond the Tigris and the Armenians sued for peace. At another the Indian tribes vied with each other, sending nobles loaded with gifts even from the Maldive Islands and Ceylon; from the south the Moors offered themselves as subjects of the Roman empire; from the north, and also from those hot climates through which the Phasis passes on its way to the sea, and from the people of the Bosphorus, and from other unknown tribes came ambassadors entreating that on the payment of annual duties they might be allowed to live in peace within their native countries. The time is now appropriate, in my opinion, since in treating of this mighty prince we are come to speak of these districts, to explain perspicuously what we have learnt by our own eyesight or by reading, about the frontiers of Thrace and the situation of the Black Sea. The lofty mountains of Athos in Macedonia, once made passable for ships by the Persians, and the Euboean rocky promontory of Caphareus, where Nauplius the father of Palamedes wrecked the Grecian fleet, though far distant from one another, separate the Aegean from the Thessalian Sea, which, extending as it proceeds, on the right, where it is widest, is full of the Sporades and Cyclades islands, which latter are so called because they lie round Delos, an island celebrated as the birthplace of the gods; on the left it washes Imbros, Tenedos, Lemnos, and Thasos; and when agitated by any gale it beats violently on Lesbos. From thence, with a receding current, it flows past the temple of Apollo Sminthius, and Troas, and Troy, renowned for the adventures of heroes; and on the west it forms the Gulf of Melas, near the head of which is seen Abdera, the abode of Protagoras and Democritus; and the blood-stained seat of the Thracian Diomedes; and the valleys through which the Maritza flows on its way to its waves; and Maronea, and Aenus, founded under sad auspices and soon deserted by Aeneas, when under the guidance of the gods he hastened onwards to ancient Italy. Then separating the Hellespont from Mount Rhodope, it passes by Cynossema, where Hecuba is supposed to be buried, and Caela, and Sestos, and Callipolis, and passing by the tombs of Ajax and Achilles, it touches Dardanus and Abydos where Xerxes, throwing a bridge across, passed over the waters on foot, and Lampsacus, given to Themistocles by the king of Persia; and Parion, founded by Parius the son of Jason. Then curving round in a semicircle and separating the opposite lands more widely in the round gulf of the sea of Marmora, it washes on the east Cyzicus, and Dindyma, the holy seat of the mighty mother Cybele, and Apamia, and Cius, and Astacus afterwards called Nicomedia from the King Nicomedes. On the west it beats against the Chersonese, Aegospotami where Anaxagoras predicted that stones would fall from heaven, and Lysimachia, and the city which Hercules founded and consecrated to the memory of his comrade Perinthus. Beyond the upper end of this island the sea again becomes very narrow where it separates Bithynia from Europe, passing by Chalcedon and Chrysopolis, and some other places of no importance. The sea thus broken, and terminated by mingling with the seas at each end, and now becoming very calm, spreads out into wider waters, as far as the eye can reach both in length and breadth. Its entire circuit, if one should measure it as one would measure an island, sailing along its shores, is 23, furlongs according to Eratosthenes, Hecataeus, and Ptolemy, and other accurate investigators of subjects of this kind, resembling, by the consent of all geographers, a Scythian bow, held at both ends by its string. When the sun rises from the eastern ocean, it is shut in by the marshes of the Sea of Azov. On the west it is bounded by the Roman provinces. On the north lie many tribes differing in language and manners; its southern side describes a gentle curve. Over this extended space are dispersed many Greek cities, which have for the most part been founded by the people of Miletus, an Athenian colony, long since established in Asia among the other Ionians by Nileus, the son of the famous Codrus, who is said to have devoted himself to his country in the Doric war. The thin extremities of the bow at each end are commanded by the two Bospori, the Thracian and Cimmerian, placed opposite to one another; and they are called Bospori because through them the daughter of Inachus, who was changed as the poets relate into a cow, passed into the Ionian sea. The right curve of the Thracian Bosphorus is covered by a side of Bithynia, formerly called Mygdonia, of which province Thynia and Mariandena are districts; as also is Bebrycia, the inhabitants of which were delivered from the cruelty of Amycus by the valour of Pollux; and also the remote spot in which the soothsayer Phineus was terrified by the threatening flight of the Harpies. The shores are curved into several long bays, into which fall the rivers Sangarius, and Phyllis, and Bizes, and Rebas; and opposite to them at the lower end are the Symplegades, two rocks which rise into abrupt peaks, and which in former times were accustomed to dash against one another with a fearful crash, and then rebounding with a sharp spring, to recoil once more against the object already struck. Even a bird could by no speed of its wings pass between these rocks as they pass and meet again without being crushed to death. These rocks, when the Argo, the first of all ships, hastening to Colchis to carry off the golden fleece, had passed unhurt by them, stood immovable for the future, the power of the whirlwind which used to agitate them being broken; and are now so firmly united that no one who saw them now would believe that they had ever been separated; if all the poems of the ancients did not agree on the point. After this portion of Bithynia, the next provinces are Pontus and Paphlagonia, in which are the noble cities of Heraclea, and Sinope, and Polemonium, and Amisus, and Tios, and Amastris, all originally founded by the energy of the Greeks; and Cerasus, from which Lucullus brought the cherry, and two lofty islands which contain the famous cities of Trapezus and Pityus. Close to them is the Thermodon, which rises in Mount Armonius, and flows through the forest of Themiscyra, to which necessity formerly compelled the Amazons to migrate. But they were routed in a fierce battle, and their flanks being uncovered by cavalry, they all perished. When their destruction became known, the rest, who had been left at home as unwarlike, were reduced to the last extremities; and fearing the attacks of their neighbours, who would now retaliate on them, they removed to the more quiet district of the Thermodon. And after a long time, their posterity again becoming numerous, returned in great force to their native regions, and became in later ages formidable to the people of many nations. Not far from hence is the gentle hill Carambis, on the north, opposite to which, at a distance of 2, furlongs, is the Criu-Metopon, a promontory of Taurica. From this spot the whole of the sea-coast, beginning at the river Halys, is like the chord of an arc fastened at both ends. On the frontiers of this district are the Dahae, the fiercest of all warriors; and the Chalybes, the first people who dug up iron, and wrought it to the use of man. Next to them lies a large plain occupied by the Byzares, the Saqires, the Tibareni, the Mosynaeci, the Macrones and the Philyres, tribes with which we have no intercourse. Next to these frontiers come the famous cantons of the Camaritae, and the Phasis, which with its roaring streams reaches the Colchi, a race descended from the Egyptians; among whom, besides other cities, is one called Phasis from the name of the river; and Dioscurias, still famous, which is said to have been founded by the Spartans Amphitus and Cercius, the charioteers of Castor and Pollux; from whom the nation of Heniochi derives its origin. At a little distance from these are the Achaei, who after some earlier Trojan war, and not that which began about Helen, as some authors have affirmed, were driven into Pontus by foul winds, and, as all around was hostile, so that they could nowhere find a settled abode, they always stationed themselves on the tops of snowy mountains; and, under the pressure of an unfavourable climate they contracted a habit of living on plunder in contempt of all danger; and thus became the most ferocious of all nations. Of the Cercetae, who lie next to them, nothing is known worth speaking of. Behind them lie the inhabitants of the Cimmerian Bosphorus, living in cities founded by the Milesiani, the chief of which is Panticapaeum, which is on the Bog, a river of great size, both from its natural waters and the streams which fall into it. Then for a great distance the Amazons stretch as far as the Caspian sea; occupying the banks of the Don, which rises in Mount Caucasus, and proceeds in a winding course, separating Asia from Europe, and falls into the swampy sea of Azov. Near to this is the Rha, on the banks of which grows a vegetable of the same name, which is useful as a remedy for many diseases.

She was born April 24, in Maryland to Allen Soper and Annie Mae (Johnson) Bowen. Evelyn was born and raised in Calvert County and graduated from Western Maryland College. After college Evelyn.

Family and friends will unite on Tuesday, January 30, from Thomas Rudolph Barnes, Sr. He was the oldest of five children. Born in Kentucky on September 3, to the late Arvel B. He was a hard worker and retired from Kiplinger Washington Editors, and proudly serviced his country in the U. Felisberto Bob Prodigalidad Felisberto Bob Prodigalidad of Waldorf, Maryland, passed away at age 93, on January 16, , due to complications of cancer-related surgery. Bob was born August 22, , in Rosario, Cavite, Philippines. He joined the U. Parker, 76 Milton C. Parker of Waldorf, MD, passed away on January 13th at the age of Milton grew up in DC and joined the Army in While in the Army he served as an MP. He worked at various Armed Forces bases as well as the Pentagon during his civilian career with He was raised on a dairy and tobacco farm in Maryland. Barksdale was a member of She was born April 13, in Washington D. Karen was raised as a military child spending much of her adolescence traveling with her family to William Norris Pickeral, Sr. William was a self-employed mechanic and owner of Picks Auto Salvage. He was known as a fair and honest car part dealer who Teslenko, Tekla Tillie K. She is survived by her three daughters: Born on September 26, in Glendale, Maryland. A beloved husband, father, grandfather, great grandfather, and brother. At a young age, Gene served in the Army Air Corps. John Sylvester Moreland Sr. He was 86 years old. Jenkins Moreland and Ernest Moreland. In her early years, she was a secretary for the war department. She loved sewing, crocheting, and Gateau and the late Amy Robertson. Frances worked as a secretary for the Federal Government for 20 years. Frank enlisted in the Army at the age Michael Thayer, 27 Michael Thayer, 27, of Mechanicsville passed away January 13, due to complications of the flu at MedStar Washington Hospital Center surrounded by his loving family. He was born June 19, in Washington, D. Yingling, 85 Edward C. Ed was born February 27, to William S. He was the oldest of 11 children. Ed is survived by his wife, Martha Yingling; daughters, Susanna, as she was known by family and friends, was married to the late Charles F. Dufour and the late Marie Lavoie Dufour. Doris was a Dental Assistant for the Department of Veterans

Chapter 8 : The new Soper compendium (edition) | Open Library

The papers of Thomas Parran consist primarily of material related to his tenure as Surgeon General of the United States, as one of the founders of the World Health Organization, and the first dean of the University of Pittsburgh's Graduate School of Public Health.

OR - odds ratio. DISCUSSION Trichomoniasis is a disease with well-known symptomatology and diagnosis, but even though, the prevalence of this infection is globally considerable, as well as the prevalence at national levels. Other studies conducted in different States of Brazil found lower rates of this infection, 5. Characteristics such as the behavior, age, educational level, personal hygiene, access to sanitation, and the type of diagnostic methods employed, taken together, are factors that might explain the existence of different positivity rates depending on the study location. Although the use of a fresh sample examination can be considered a limiting factor of this study, mainly because of its low sensitivity, it is commonly used due to its suitability to the physical and economic resources availability for routine diagnostic in the public sector, especially in Units Health of developing countries. The diagnosis of trichomoniasis performed by the Polymerase Chain Reaction PCR or by culture methods have a good sensitivity and specificity, however, they are laborious and present higher costs, therefore limiting their use in laboratory routines, in the context of the Unified Health System in Brazil 6. It is noteworthy that the prevalence estimates for T. Sexually transmitted diseases STDs are among the 10 leading causes of disease in young adults in the world In this study, we observed a higher frequency of T. In a review of 30 studies on the prevalence of trichomoniasis in Iranian women, a mean age of Similarly, when women of Portugal were analyzed, a high frequency of T. In the present study these differences were not significant, probably due to the relative homogeneity of the group, given that only a few women had completed the high school, and only five reported having a higher education complete or incomplete. Regarding the symptoms, Among these, vaginal discharge, burning, and itching in the genital area are highlighted. These symptoms are the same reported by women in other studies 9 , However, in the United States, no association was found between the presence of symptoms and positivity for T. Although the presence of certain symptoms may suggest vaginal parasitism, in this study, These data reinforce the perception that the presence of signs and symptoms, though supporting the diagnosis of trichomoniasis, cannot be used alone to achieve an accurate diagnosis 10 , reinforcing the importance of conducting laboratory tests to improve the diagnostic rates, and also, that a lack of symptoms does not exclude the possibility of infection, and of infected partners. Women who had two or more partners in the year before the study period were 3. In women from the United States New York , the number of partners was also related to a higher incidence of infection. Women who reported having more than one sexual partner were four times more likely to acquire T. Corroborating these findings, in southern Brazil, sexually transmitted diseases like trichomoniasis are also associated with multiple partners 12 and in the southeast, there was a higher prevalence of STDs in women who had four or more partners in the six months preceding the study Among the positive women, eleven were pregnant. This information deserves attention, since trichomoniasis during pregnancy is a risk factor for premature birth and low birth weight, and is likely to be vertically transmitted to the newborn, resulting in neonatal disease 30 , A review of the literature has provided strong evidence that T. The study did not monitor these pregnant women to find out whether T. Regarding the use of contraceptives, A methodological question must be considered when examining the association between the use of hormonal contraception and STDs: However, two factors might explain the results associating the use of oral contraceptives and trichomoniasis: Despite the variation of prevalence, it is known that infection rates are usually higher in developing countries, depending on the scope and quality of health care, socioeconomic conditions, and educational status of the population Considering the possible effects on women and their partners health and consequences for pregnancy, these findings emphasize the need to increase our knowledge on this infection. Therefore, we recommend that T. Van Der Pol B. Trichomoniasis and bacterial vaginosis in pregnancy: Bull World Health Organ. Int J Trop Med. Perspective of a new diagnostic for human trichomonosis. Mem Inst Oswaldo Cruz. Simple and inexpensive point-of-care tests improve diagnosis of vaginal infections in resource constrained settings. Trop Med Int Health. Trichomonas vaginalis genital infections: Epidemiologia de Trichomonas vaginalis em mulheres. Rev Port Saude Publica. Am J Obstet Gynecol. Rev Bras Anal Clin. Braz J Infect Dis. Simultaneous detection of seven sexually transmitted agents in human immunodeficiency virus-infected Brazilian women by multiplex polymerase chain reaction. Am J Trop Med Hyg. Trichomonas vaginalis infection among young pregnant women in Brazil. Lwanga SK, Lemeshow S. Sample size determination in health studies: World Health Organization; Sexually transmitted infections, bacterial vaginosis, and candidiasis in women of reproductive age in rural Northeast Brazil: Trichomonas vaginalis infection among Iranian general population of women: The prevalence of Trichomonas vaginalis infection among reproductive-age women in the United States, An association between Trichomonas vaginalis and high-risk human papillomavirus in rural Tanzanian women undergoing cervical cancer screening. Factors associated with the prevalence and incidence of Trichomonas vaginalis infection among African American women in New York city who use drugs. Host immune consequences of asymptomatic Trichomonas vaginalis infection in pregnancy. Trichomonas vaginalis as a cause of perinatal morbidity: Hormonal contraceptive use and risk of sexually transmitted infections:

Chapter 9 : The new Soper compendium | Open Library

The American Revolutionary War (), also known as the American War of Independence, was an 18th-century war between Great Britain and its Thirteen Colonies (allied with France) which declared independence as the United States of America.

I have looked into the Rhodesia question. Owen never mentioned this to me. We support the Fund, but not the buy out aspect envisaged by Dr. This would be part of the consulting process. We reserve our position. We will have to go back and look at the minutes. The position of the Congress and our own position are clear. The original plan was for a buy out Fund. It now would be a way to have provisions which will reassure all. Perhaps the money from the Fund could be used for expenses within Rhodesia, which would release other funds which could be used for that purpose. We hope that a post-independence Rhodesia would be secure for all. You have mentioned a desire to include protection for those with property. Would that include pensions? But we believe, yes. And property at a real market value. We reserve our stand. We will have to clear up the matter with the British. In an effort to produce a constructive hopeful environment, could you agree to the following language?: I will consider it and reply before you leave. I already have told the Five my position concerning South West Africa. We do not want one inch for ourselves. It is not part of South Africa, and we would not incorporate it if you wanted us to. South West Africa belongs to various peoples; they are independent people, have different languages, different cultures, different levels of development, and different numbers. We always wanted it to come to independence as an entity although, for a period, we explored establishing separate developmentâ€”which is what they wanted. From , we agreed that the peoples would determine their own future. Escher, a Swiss diplomat in Vienna. Escher and I came to an understanding, in writing. The fact is that Escher was ignored: Both Waldheim and Escher reproached us, saying that we were keeping the people of South West Africa from each other. As a result, to the satisfaction of Waldheim and Escher, I brought the leaders together, to know each other, and to work together. I have kept to this obligation. Meetings have been held and agreement was reached to work together. They have had several elections. In the last one, two years ago, all Ovambos who had left were invited back, with the agreement that nothing would be held against them. The only requirement was to come in peace. South Africa never, from the Mandate, governed either Ovambo or Okavango. The Basters have 16, out of , people. They are proud of being Basters. They will come up on the street and introduce themselves as Basters. They have their own constitution. They also have governed themselves and have laws which apply only if the Basters want them applied. Nor do the Hereros, who are 43, They all want a government and have asked for it, and we owe them governments. This was serious work. By a miracle a consensus approved a constitution. South Africa is committed to giving them a constitution. We warned the parties [Page] of this commitment and have told them that by mid-May, they would be asking for it. After all, they drew it up. I have no desire to interfere. Had it not been for the Five, I would have given them that constitution. But the Five objected seriously. I stuck my neck out far by agreeing not to have the South African Parliament approve the constitution. Rather, the State President will. But, I suggested that the contact group see the people in Windhoek. Turnhalle is not my friend: That is the situation. Now our attitude isâ€”and no one will get us away from thisâ€”that it is their situation to decide. As I understand it, agreement was reached with the Five that there would be elections, with all participating. There was no agreement. The Five said they had to go back to their governments. We said we had to go to speak to the people at Turnhalle. Secondly, I understand that agreement was reached for the UN to have a representative present to satisfy the fairness of the elections and the electoral process. To give it international credibility. Thirdly, that South Africa agreed to withdraw instrumentalities of government in phases. We discussed the development of a program for the withdrawal of instrumentalities after the electoral process. That was the situation then on withdrawal. There were no agreements on detainees and political prisoners, or restrictive laws. But we found these discussions very hopeful. I also agreed on 31 December as the date for independence. There was progress and we were glad of it. What happened in the later talks you had after the Capetown meeting? There [Page] was a full gamut of reactions, running from the belief that real progress had been achieved to the feeling that no progress had been reached. There also was suspicion over the trust-worthiness of South Africa. In general, the questions asked were the same as those asked in Capetown: There was concern over the extent of UN involvement which would be necessary to overcome suspicion. The question of political prisoners had to be resolved. There must be a phased withdrawal. South Africa could be in a position to intimidate, thereby upsetting the environment for free elections. These were the basic questions; there also were other ones. The reaction of the Turnhalle group was different. They suspected any UN role. They were disappointed over the delay in ratification, but were open. Only this morning I received a telegram from them asking the status of the constitution. In order to be consistent with Resolution , it must be a neutral authority. Secondly, we need fair and equal participation in a national election. Its purpose should be to create a constituent assembly, leading to a constitution and a governing process. What does South Africa have in mind? We already explained this to you. Most of the people already have their own governments; there are some without. The Hereros and Damaras want local government. My government and I are committed to give it to them. Normally, there would have been a law approved by the South African Parliament before the end of June but, to accommodate the Five, rather than Parliament, I agreed that the State President could promulgate it. I understood that the Five looked favorably upon this. I am also heavily committed to give them a constitution, if they want it. But again, as I have said, I agreed that rather than Parliament, the State President will promulgate it. This is an absolute minimum. The people are elected under a system the same as that which we seek to apply in Rhodesia. What is the central authority? The government will have representatives [Page] of each population group.