The first two generations were essentially rebadged Mitsubishi Debonairs, with the third generations developed entirely by Hyundai, with technical experience learned from the first two generations. After their success with the Grandeur, Hyundai decided to develop the next generation Grandeur on their own from the ground up with the technology they have accumulated through the past Grandeur generations. It was also called the XG25 in some markets. It was produced until 1998. There was also a two-liter model called the XG20 for some markets, including the domestic South Korean one. It was called the XG30 in Europe and in Asian countries. It was produced from 1998 to 2000. The XG30 is also longer and wider than most of its rivals, and it is just a fraction smaller than the Audi A6. In the United States, the XG was equipped with the 3.0L V6. A slight discount was available on XG models that deleted the automatic electronic climate control in favor for a manual three-dial system. Other options included a power moonroof on the base model, and a trunk-mounted eight-disc CD changer for the L model. New 17-inch bright spoke alloy wheels were an inch larger than for the model year. In the United States, the power moonroof was no longer an option on base models. In the model year, the XG received larger front brakes discs went from 11.5 to 12.5 inches. Also new this year were restyled front and rear bumpers, bodyside moldings, headlights now with HID availability, driving lights, tail lamps, grille, and deck lid with recessed license plate holder. The high-mounted stop lamp in the rear window went to an all-new LED design. The interior wood-tone trim changed to a lighter shade, glove compartment and storage bins were now covered in charcoal gray material formerly black, the door-mounted power window switch panels now matched the interior color previously, they were high-gloss wood-tone, recessed seat tethers allowed for secure installation of child seats in all three rear seat positions, and the trunk hinges were now supported using hydraulic pistons. The L versions were equipped with specific spoke silver-painted alloy rims featuring center caps covering the lug nuts. Minor equipment changes inside included redesigned levers for the hood release and tilt steering column, an updated cruise control switch, a recessed trunk pull-down handle, and leather trim around the console armrest tray. Both the base and L models now offered the formerly optional carpeted floor mats as standard equipment, while the L model was now equipped with a standard trunk-mounted eight-disc CD changer.

Delusions of grandeur are false beliefs held by an individual in which they believe with full conviction that they are a celebrity, person of high rank, omnipotent, and/or a powerful entity - despite significant evidence to the contrary. Imagine waking up one day thinking that you're the.

She has always lived with our parents. Now she is their caregiver. She is highly disorganized, leaves frequently when we are all together " for an hour or more. She believes she talks to dead people. Her stories about this are extensive and frequent. She has been diagnosed with bipolar disorder and is on an antidepressant and on something like lithium. She has been in weekly counseling for over 6 months. I have not seen any changes. When she is with someone, she talks non-stop, dominates the conversation. It is exhausting to be around her. It is criminal that she is the caregiver for my parents but my parents lives have become her life as the years have gone by. Living in filth, sleeping until noon, staying up until 2 or 3am. I struggle so much being around her that I end up rarely seeing my parents. Reply Link Brandon March 17, , 9: Also, some kind of success helps, too. You have to get out into the world and help people, if you want your delusions to go away. You have to force yourself to see the world as it is. Not how you want it to be. Maybe hospitalized, maybe an invalid. You need to understand that you ought not let someone persist in a delusion. Depression is part of the cure. They self destruct, they look absolutely insane to those observing them. You have to sometimes just realize the fact: Reply Link Anika March 28, , 9: He was on meds, but is now off and is having delusions of grandeur about like Litledragon comment. Something big is going to happen and anyone around him will be protected. It feels like being held hostage our own home. Life is crap! Reply Link Leslie June 8, , 9: Is he working or going to school? Perhaps you could help him find some theology or sociology class. Get him out of the house more often. Reply Link Mary October 28, , 3: He has worked I the financial area for many years but has had 2 episodes of losing his job. He is currently working and is making less money than he did 30 years ago. He feels he will make it as a writer. He has self published 2 books which have cost us money. He has not broke even. Then last year he also decided to rent office space so he could write. And he has signed a 2 year lease. He took money out of his retirement for this. He did a film project two years ago and invested about 8k of his own money. He still has not put it out there and hopes to sell it. At times he is down. We have 4 older children and a grandchild. Is always running to his office to write and talks about all his writing projects and how this is his talent. Tells me he meets these producers who tell him his writing is good. So I am concerned these are grandiose delusions. Reply Link Kyle August 14, , 6: The logical conclusion truth, if you will is that I feel helpless and worthless " and as a result of this, my subconscious clings to a non-disprovable notion that would assign satisfactory value to my otherwise unbearably meaningless pain. So please, someone, tell me how this looks to you, even if it sounds bloody ridiculous. It would mean a lot to me. Your honesty has helped me " thank you. I share this in the hope that it will help normalize your feelings " I am also so conflicted about accepting or rejecting a self narrative that is non-disprovable, as you say. It is a comfort that also terrorizes. It is so hard. There is no knowing. Maybe you are Kurt Cobain reincarnated. Maybe you feel connected to him because you share a similar consciousness or experience. Maybe your brain has been traumatized and is building this beautiful escape path for you. It also seems to me that Kurt Cobain was married to a narcissist " which makes me wonder, especially because you seem so empathetic, if you have been traumatized by a narcissist " perhaps your mother? That could maybe be an explanation to your connection to Kurt and also the reason why you are feeling helpless and worthless. I could be way off here " so please take with a grain of salt. If it does resonate, being parented by a narcissist is very, very difficult to survive and overcome. It is very hard to even identify this dynamic when it is so close " especially if the narcissist is intelligent. Maybe your mind is trying to make sense of it all and has brought this connection into your consciousness so you can start to unravel the past. Peace to you on your journey. Reply Link Pretty August 4, , 6: I am from an abusive background emotionally. I also believe I suffer from anxiety because I struggle with expressing myself even with people I know. I am known as the shy one but I hate this because I now struggle with public speaking and this becomes a problem during meetings. This has been going on for sometime and I struggle mostly with expressing my feelings and thoughts. I feel I will be judged should I say anything stupid. Reply Link Christine July 7, , 3: And let me tell you, I really believed it. Reply Link Kaley June 10, , 1: He used to never believe in God and in fact almost hated the thought of there being a God. Two days ago he disappeared with a very high minded superior Facebook status of saying good bye. He also claimed he had the highest knowledge of spirituality. He claimed no one else did that he could hear and talk to God and that he was going away to wait to hear from God. So in a way God has not talked to him yet. The black belt just recently happened but his life was way before that. He talks like he has been on this spiritual journey. Reply Link Littledragon June 2, , 7: I always spend my whole life alone with no friends to be with. When I am depressed of my life situation I take drugs to cope. Then the time came that I suddenly think about myself that I am special among the people. My ego has gone loose and think of myself as Christ. I also think that I came here for a purpose; to awaken the masses against the false sense of reality our governments and different institutions installed into our minds. That everyone else are living under the spell of social and cultural illusions. After months of believing myself that I am Christ I soon realized that maybe I am wrong. That maybe what I think as a mystical experience is just a psychic response to my overall mental problems. Because of my mental states I soon realized that some of my acquaintances are avoiding me and I become their laughingstock. Whenever some people that I know see me they already have the impression that I am crazy. I also have no job and no friends to ask for help. My family where also problematic that they will pay no attention to my problem. Reply Link Donna July 24, , 6: My husband has had this problem for nearly 20 years and cannot see it. Periods of stress and depression do him in. I am proud of you.

A special edition of The Compass called Explorations is published specifically for children. The Spa and Fitness Center can be found on deck 9. The main dining area, the Great Gatsby, is located on decks 4 and 5. Guests are seated in two shifts on deck four of the main dining 5: The shows in The Palladium the main theater, found on decks 5 and 6 , are designed around the dining room times. The ship also contains a conference center, a library with an honor checkout system and a buffet called The Windjammer Market Place, 2 shuffle board courts, a rock wall with areas for climbers of various skills, a photo shop, several stores specializing on jewelry, souvenirs, cigars, cigarettes, and liquor, and a piano area. Since , Grandeur of the Seas has been deployed in Europe as well as back in the Caribbean homeported in cities such as Tampa, Ft. Lauderdale, and New Orleans. Incidents and accidents[ edit ] Power loss[ edit ] On 31 October , Grandeur of the Seas lost power for 5. The next seven-day cruise was shortened to five as the ship had to remain in Costa Maya an extra 2 days awaiting materials to patch the hole. Royal Caribbean offered guests transportation back to New Orleans or onboard credit if they chose to stay with the ship. The ship was later dry docked and the damage was repaired. Ship-board fire[ edit ] On 27 May at 2: The fire was extinguished within three hours, and major damage was limited to the aftmost sections of decks 3, 4, and 5. As a precaution, all passengers were required to report to evacuation locations for several hours. No evacuation was necessary, and the ship was able to continue under her own power to the Bahamas. The remainder of the cruise was canceled and passengers were flown back to their point of origin from Freeport, Bahamas. The fall wire of the lifeboat was undergoing scheduled maintenance and the wire slipped during retrieval, causing the lifeboat to fall into the water. The lifeboat subsequently capsized. The ship was able to travel safely, and turned around towards Freeport, Bahamas, but arrived in Port Canaveral on 10 January The detour and repair work ultimately added 2 nights to the 9-night cruise, with the ship arriving back in Baltimore on 13 January instead of the originally planned 11 January As a result, the subsequent cruise was shortened by two nights.
