

Chapter 1 : Test Taking Tips | Penn State Learning

My First Time Tag Questions. Like I earlier said, You can do a first-time tag question for any theme: first time dirty tag, where you ask first time dirty/sex related questions, you can do a first time mom tag, where you ask mom related first time you ever did this questions.

Do you have trouble speaking up in groups? Are you a control freak? For example, you can say you get nervous speaking in front of a large group. You could also say that you like to be in control and have a difficult time working on a team. As an Administrative Assistant, I work alone or one-on-one with other people. I have excellent communication skills when making travel arrangements or negotiating with vendors. But I struggle if I have to work on a team with others. Wrong Disguise a strength as a weakness. I am a workaholic. I spend every waking hour thinking about how to improve my performance at work. I do not have a work-life balance because my job is my life. The second part of your answer should illustrate what measures you are taking to fix the problem. Remember, this common interview question is behavioral. So, deliver a confident answer that involves examples of self-improvement. Are you taking any training courses? Did you pick up some activities outside of work that help you develop your weaker skills? Use these as examples. During my employee review, I told my supervisor that I had trouble with teamwork. I asked if there was a way I could improve. I signed up for a series of internal workshops and team building exercises. The events helped me practice the things I learned during the workshops. My supervisor complimented me on my progress after a half year of hard work. Wrong Go into a detailed explanation of your weakness in a way that exposes other weaknesses. As an Administrative Assistant, I often work alone. I often interrupt the person talking or the group leader. To be honest, I know how to run things better than they do. I mean, come on! And neither do I. Is there an employee review process so that I can gauge the things I need to improve? Prepare a couple of answers in case there are follow-up job interview questions. The person interviewing you may ask about a second weakness, or they may feel like the first was too minor. Still not sure which weaknesses to bring up during your interview? General Tips Before you Begin Preview the test before you answer anything. This gets you thinking about the material. Make sure to note the point value of each question. This will give you some ideas on budgeting your time. Quickly calculate how much time you should allow for each section according to the point value. Do a mind dump. Using what you saw in the preview, make notes of anything you think you might forget. Write down things that you used in learning the material that might help you remember. Outline your answers to discussion questions. Taking a Test Read the directions. Can more than one answer be correct? Are you penalized for guessing? Never assume that you know what the directions say. Answer the easy questions first. This will give you the confidence and momentum to get through the rest of the test. You are sure these answers are correct. Try not to spend too much time on one question. Go back to the difficult questions. While looking over the test and doing the easy questions, your subconscious mind will have been working on the answers to the hardest ones. Also, later items on the test might give you useful or needed information for earlier items. Answer all questions unless you are penalized for wrong answers. Ask the instructor to explain any items that are not clear. Do not ask for the answer, but phrase your question in a way that shows the instructor that you have the information but are not sure what the question is asking for. Try to remember what the instructor emphasized and felt was important. Use the margin to help you figure out if the question does not seem clear or if the answer seems ambiguous. Circle key words in difficult questions. This will force you to focus on the central point. Express difficult questions in your own words. Use all of the time allotted for the test. If you have extra time, cover up your answers and actually rework the question. Essay Exams Guidelines for taking an essay exam Make sure you are ready for the test both mentally and physically. Listen carefully to the final instructions of the teacher. How much time do you have to complete the test? Do all the questions count equally? Are there any corrections, changes, or additions to the test? Begin the test immediately and watch the time carefully. Read all the essay questions carefully, paying special attention to the key words. Ask the teacher to clarify any question you may not understand. Rephrase the question into the central idea for your essay answer. Think before you write. Jot down all the important information and work it into a brief outline. Do this on the back of the test sheet or on a piece of scrap paper. Use a logical pattern of organization and a strong topic sentence for each paragraph. Write concisely without using abbreviations or nonstandard language. Emphasize those areas of the subject you are most sure of. Keep your test paper neat with reasonable margins. Neatness is always important; readability is a must, especially on an exam. Revise and proofread as carefully and completely as time will permit. Planning and writing the essay test question It is important to understand what the teacher is asking for in an essay question. Too many students make the error of thinking the best way to answer an essay question is to write down everything and anything about the topic as fast as they can. No time is taken to think about the essay test question or to organize an appropriate answer. The first step in correctly handling an essay test question is to read the question several times until you are sure you know what the teacher is asking. As you read, you must pay special attention to the key words found in every essay question. Your ability to understand and respond to these key words is a basic skill necessary to handling the essay question. Below are some steps for writing a good essay. Read the question several times or until you clearly understand what is being asked for. Pay specific attention to the "key word" being used in the question. Rephrase the question into a statement, which can serve as the thesis statement for your essay answer or the topic sentence for a one-paragraph answer. It often works well to keep the key words in your thesis statement. Outline the main points you plan to cover in your answer. Time will probably not allow you to include all supporting details in your outline. Using a topic outline rather than a sentence outline will also save time. Your opening sentence will be your thesis statement the reworded question. Follow this with any background information, which is necessary for a complete understanding of your answer. Important Points to Remember A few minutes of careful planning are crucial to a good essay answer. Budget your time for planning, writing, and editing. Read the question carefully; be sure you understand what the question is asking you to do, and what all parts of the answer should be. Make notes, then organize them and check to see that your outline contains everything it should. Writing The most important thing in writing the essay is to stay on track and still explain your points adequately. Keep in mind any special instructions your instructor gave. Keep introductions and conclusions short. Say what you are going to say in the introduction, then say it in the body, restate what you have just said in your conclusion. Stick to your outline. Try not to start over if you get off track; just get back to your outline. If you can save time, reading your essay over can help greatly. Do I need to reread the question? Does it answer the question? Are any points left out? Are there words or phrases that you skipped writing fast? Did you spell important words relevant to the subject correctly? Putting problems into words aids your understanding. When you study equations and formulas, put those into words too. The words help you see a variety of applications for each formula. If a problem involves multiplication, check your work by dividing; add, subtract; factor, multiply; square root, square; differentiate, integrate. Practice working problems fast. Exchange problems with a friend and time each other. You can also do this in a study group. Analyze before you compute. Set up the problem before you begin to solve it. When a problem is worth a lot of points, read it twice, slowly. When you take time to analyze a problem you can often see ways to take computational shortcuts. Draw a clear picture or a diagram if you are stuck. Sometimes a visual representation will clear a blocked mind. Estimation is a good way to double-check your work. Doing this first can help you notice if your computations go awry, and then you can correct the error quickly. Check your work systematically. When you check your work, ask yourself: Did I read the problem correctly? Did I use the correct formula or equation?

Share15 50 Shares How long will it take to get ready for my first 5K? How long do I need to train for a 5K? These are the biggest questions I get from people considering their first 5K. Did your first 5K land on you by surprise? It suddenly hits you: Put that idea out of your head right now! The Galloway Method is one of the best ways to start running because it allows you to slowly increase your run time. Your body has plenty of room to adjust and get used to each new pace. You know the saying: Week 1 – 3: When you find a comfortable split, focus on increasing your distance or use it to play with your pace during the run portion. The objective is to build up endurance, not to feel like you need to continuously run for hours on end. Some runners may even find their walk time is nearly as fast as their jog! One of the best ways to relieve pressure around your first 5K attempt is to remember this: Simply set your goal to steadily progress. Not only do you risk injury, but you risk mental burnout. If you want to continue to build your running skills, aim for a finish you feel good about. In fact, a low baseline puts you on track for those two little letters that thrill runners: Enjoy each time you manage to set a record. This brings us to – 3. A fast walk at 4. For beginners, training for a 5K takes time. Are you starting from scratch with no recent exercise experience? Do you have a time goal? What kinds of other workouts are you already doing? Are you currently walking daily or biking frequently? Are you in pretty decent shape but looking to add running to your regular routine? Running uses different muscles and requires you to build stamina and cardio capacity. Are you taking consistent fitness classes or engaging in a little running, but somewhat sporadically? Allow at least 8 weeks. Note this program only looks at 3 days a week of running. This is plenty to get you started, but for a bonus spend a little time 2 or 3 other days of the week cross training. For runners, cross training is a powerful tool to help you build strength, endurance and even avoid injury. What are the best cross training options for runners? Yoga is a great way to incorporate gentle stretching into your routine. The focus on breathing will help you increase your lung capacity and ease tightness in your hips. Biking is another great option as is swimming, Pilates and even working out from home. Incorporate more fitness into your daily routine – take the stairs, get a standing desk and park out in the boonies when you go to the store. PT exercise will help you prevent IT band injuries and calf strain. It also helps increase your hip flexibility. Here are a few easy PT moves to get started. Incorporate them into your routine at least once a week. In fact, it even gives you an excuse to procrastinate. That being said, if new gear is going to get you motivated it definitely motivates me!!
