Chapter 1 : TracFone ZTE ZMAX Champ ZVL User Manual / User Guide

Performance offered by ZTE Zmax Pro is relatively competitive in its class to be powered by Qualcomm Snapdragon chipset that carries octa-core processor ARM Cortex-A53 bit consisting of a quad-core processor speed of GHz and GHz quad-core processor speed combined with 2GB of RAM memory and a supported processor Adreno graphics.

This smartphone is the one you should be after. It has loaded with tons of features. And about the specs it is even better than many mid range devices. For instance it has a massive 6 inch display which happens to be a full HD panel. The engine is powered with a 1. The GPU is Adreno graphics. The optics department is powered by a 13 megapixel sensor. It has fingerprint sensor on the back and the lists goes on and on. All these can be also considered as disadvantages, demerits, bugs and downsides. The first issues is with the absence of ambient light sensor. It is required for adaptive brightness of the display. It takes more than 5 hours to fully charge the battery. The reason is because it does not have fast battery charging technology which is another ZTE Zmax Pro issues or demerits. Next is the video quality of the 13 megapixel camera is quite shaky. Plus the quality in artificial lightning or low light the video quality is a bit grainy.. It takes more than 1 second to unlock the device with the fingerprint sensor. It is one of the slowest fingerprint sensor to have on a smartphone. A Far Better Alternative Smartphone 8. And finally the last ZTE Zmax issues or problems is the absence of dedicated sales after support. They just refer to third-party ones, and you know what, those third-party service centers are pathetic. Despite the problems and issues it still a good buy if you compromise. But in case if you cannot compromise then follow the link below for a better alternative smartphone.
